Flu outbreaks and past pandemics

ATLANTA, Georgia (CNN) – While U.S. health officials are taking the recent deadly influenza outbreak seriously, its
The scope is modest compared with flu pandemics of the 20th century that killed tens of millions of people.

The worst flu pandemic on record — the infamous Spanish flu of 1918 and 1919 — killed an estimated 20 million to 50 million people worldwide and some 500,000 in the United States alone, according to the Atlanta-based Centers for Disease Control and Prevention.

Within just two years, 20 percent to 40 percent of the human race was thought to have fallen ill from the virus.

Almost half of those who died in the plague — which occurred before the development of virus-fighting vaccines — were young and otherwise-healthy adults, according to the CDC.

A flu epidemic happens when a virus spreads rapidly through a population. This happens nearly every year. A pandemic occurs when a virus spreads across the world.

It wasn’t until 1934 that scientists were able to isolate the influenza type A virus, and eventually develop vaccines in the 1940s.

Vaccinations may have prevented the 1957 Asian flu from being worse than it was. It was blamed for the deaths of about 70,000 people in the United States — most of them elderly.

According to the CDC, the 1957 pandemic was identified quickly because of scientific advances — also helping to prevent more deaths. Cases multiplied a great deal shortly after the original U.S. outbreak in August of that year because children spread the disease when they returned to school in the fall. The highest infection rates were among school children, young adults and pregnant women.

Flu fatalities diminished greatly by 1968, when the Hong Kong flu raced around the globe. The number of people killed in the United States in this pandemic was about 34,000, according to CDC records, making it the mildest flu pandemic of the century, according to CDC records.

Together, the Hong Kong and Asian flus caused an estimated 1.5 million worldwide deaths, according to the World Health Organization, and cost $32 billion in health care and lost productivity.

Flu fears

The 1918 Spanish flu outbreak led to a so-called “pandemic scare” in 1976, when a unique virus called the Swine flu was identified in Fort Dix, New Jersey. Scientists thought the Swine flu was related to the Spanish strain, which had killed so many millions of people 60 years earlier.

The resulting flu fears in the United States prompted President Gerald Ford to authorize a $135 million national immunization program to fight the latest strain, dubbed Swine flu.

The funds paid for about 200 million doses of vaccine manufactured by private pharmaceutical firms and local officials were given $26 million for mass inoculations.

All the fears and preparations turned out to be unnecessary. Although 40 million people in the United States were vaccinated, the virus failed to spread, and neither an epidemic nor a full-blown pandemic of Swine flu ever developed.

More recently, flu scares in the 1990s also failed to erupt into major health threats. A 1997 outbreak of Avian flu — a virus previously seen only in birds — killed six people in Hong Kong and prompted Chinese officials to order the slaughter of all chickens in the region.

Hong Kong also was the focal point of a 1999 flu scare which also was linked to birds. Although no one was known to have died from the strain, two children identified with the virus were hospitalized and later recovered.

THE HEALTH CARE DEBATE: IMMUNIZATIONS; Clinton’s Plan for Immunization Of Children Suffers a New Blow

In a sudden reversal, the Clinton Administration has abandoned plans for a national vaccine warehouse, which was to store and distribute vaccine as part of a campaign to immunize children across the country starting Oct. 1.

The demise of the warehouse is the latest in a series of setbacks to a Clinton initiative that, when first proposed in 1993, called for providing free, Government-subsidized vaccines to all children. The program has since been scaled back several times and, with cancellation of the plan for a vaccine warehouse, even less of the President’s proposal survives.

Administration officials said today that they still wanted to see all children immunized and hoped to raise immunization levels by having manufacturers make bulk shipments of vaccine to state health departments and public health clinics. Such shipments are already common practice.

But under pressure from the drug industry and Congress, the Administration has scrapped plans to use a Federal warehouse in Burlington, N.J., for the storage and distribution of vaccine.

Congress established a new program to provide free vaccines to low-income and uninsured children last year, but did not specify how the vaccines would be distributed. The Administration chose to use a Federal warehouse.

The Government has already spent more than $700,000 to buy freezers and other equipment needed to keep vaccine in the warehouse. Critics said the money would have been better spent on efforts to educate parents and find children who had not received their shots.

The vaccine distribution program, described by Administration officials as a dress rehearsal for efforts to restructure the entire health care system, was to begin on Oct. 1.

Federal and state health officials said the Government’s effort to store and distribute vaccine offered two lessons relevant to the larger debate: The health care system as it exists in 50 diverse states is far more complex than many people in Washington assume, and the Government needs cooperation from the health care industry if it wants to guarantee health care for all Americans.

Administration officials, who have defended the warehouse for the last eight months, changed course after members of Congress, drug company executives, Federal auditors and many state officials concluded that the Public Health Service did not have the ability to distribute vaccine to tens of thousands of private doctors on schedule.

As recently as last month, President Clinton and Donna E. Shalala, the Secretary of Health and Human Services, said they were confident that the Government could do the job with help from another Federal agency, the General Services Administration, which runs the warehouse in New Jersey.
But Dr. Walter A. Orenstein, director of the national immunization program at the Federal Centers for Disease Control, said today: “The G.S.A. delivery system will not be used. We are in the process of looking for alternative ways to get vaccine delivered.”

The alternatives, he said, call for vaccine to be shipped by drug companies or commercial distributors, not by the Government. Clinton Administration officials had argued that the Government could distribute vaccine more cheaply and efficiently than private companies, but members of Congress said that assertion was never proved. With the warehouse eliminated as an option, Congress may need to pass a separate bill to pay private companies for distribution.

“It has clearly hurt implementation of the vaccine program to have so much controversy,” said Dr. Orenstein. “That’s one reason for abandoning the G.S.A. distribution system, so we can have something acceptable to more people.”

Senator Dale Bumpers, Democrat of Arkansas, a close friend of President Clinton and his wife, Hillary, said the Administration’s plans for ordering, storing and distributing vaccine were “indescribably complicated.”

“A fairly simple law, designed to benefit a relatively small group of uninsured children, was transformed into a bureaucratic nightmare that put the safety and availability of a third of our nation’s vaccine supply at risk,” Mr. Bumpers said. He asserted that the Administration’s plan “took us dangerously close to nationalizing the pediatric vaccine market,” a result he said Congress never intended.

Senator Dan Coats, Republican of Indiana, asked, “If we cannot run a vaccine for children program, how are we going to run health care for everything else?” States Left in the Lurch

The decision to scrap the warehouse leaves many states in the lurch. Dr. F. Edgar Thompson Jr., the state health officer of Mississippi, said today, “We can distribute vaccine to the 120 State Health Department clinics here, but we have no means of distributing vaccines to hundreds of private physicians.”

The vaccine program originated in President Clinton’s desire to protect children against diseases like measles, mumps, diphtheria, polio, whooping cough and spinal meningitis. Less than a month after the President took office, Mrs. Clinton assailed drug companies as price gougers, and Mr. Clinton said children went without vaccine because the manufacturers were pursuing “profits at the expense of our children.”

Mr. Clinton first proposed that the Government distribute free vaccine to all children. But in 1993, Congress adopted a more modest program making vaccine available to children who were uninsured or eligible for Medicaid, the Federal-state program for low-income people.

Lawmakers were stunned when they learned last spring that the Government intended to set up a Federal vaccine warehouse. Senator John C. Danforth, Republican of Missouri, summarized Congressional reaction in May: “This program is getting bollixed up. The Government is taking over the vaccine distribution system. That’s crazy.”

In a letter to House members in June, Marian Wright Edelman, president of the Children’s Defense Fund, said the Federal warehouse was the only way to guarantee that delivery of publicly purchased vaccine would start on schedule Oct. 1. “There will be at least a nine-month delay in implementation if the Federal warehouse is scrapped at this late date,” she said then. Moreover, Mrs. Edelman wrote, “The storage and delivery of vaccines is not a difficult task.”

Debate over the warehouse diverted attention from the goal of immunizing all children. “Critics used concerns about the distribution system to cast the entire vaccine program in a negative light,” said James D. Weill, general counsel of the Children’s Defense Fund. “That’s like saying the Pentagon paid too much for hammers, so the Pentagon shouldn’t have any budget.”

The General Accounting Office, an investigative arm of Congress, suggested last month that the cost of vaccine was not an important barrier to immunization. Most children inadequately vaccinated are already eligible for free shots, it said. But the Administration says cost is an important consideration for poor families.

Clinton Administration officials say that drug companies have resisted the Government’s efforts to buy and distribute vaccine because of concern about their profits. Under the 1993 law, Federal and state governments, which now buy about half of all childhood vaccine, would have increased their share of the market to 80 percent, leaving 20 percent in sales to private doctors and clinics. Drug company revenues would have declined because the Federal Government and many states get deep discounts.

John Adams address to MA Officers

“What while our country remains untainted with the principles and manners which are now producing desolation in so many parts of the world; while she continues sincere, and incapable of insidious and impious policy, we shall have the strongest reason to rejoice in the local destination assigned us by Providence. But should the people of America once become capable of that deep simulation towards one another, and towards foreign nations, which assumes the language of justice and moderation while it is practising iniquity and extravagance, and displays I have received from Major-General Hull and Brigadier, General Walker your unanimous address from Lexington, animated with a martial spirit, and expressed with a military dignity becoming your character and the memorable plains on which it was adopted. in the most captivating manner the charming pictures of candor, frankness, and sincerity, while it is rioting in rapine and insolence, this country will be the most miserable habitation in the World; “because we have no government armed with power capable of contending with human passions unbridled by morality and religion. Avarice, ambition, revenge, or gallantry, would break the strongest cords of our Constitution as a whale goes through a net. Our Constitution was made only for a moral and religious people. It is wholly inadequate to the government of any other.”

An address from the officers commanding two thousand eight hundred men, consisting of such substantial citizens as are able and willing at their own expense completely to arm and clothe themselves in handsome uniforms, does honor to that division of the militia which has done so much honor to its country. Oaths in this country are as yet universally considered as sacred obligations. That which you have taken and so solemnly repeated on that venerable spot, is an ample pledge of your sincerity and devotion to your country and its government.
